2: 5 Pillars of Equitable Grading for English Learners Checklist

Directions:

Reflect on the steps of each pillar and select Yes, Somewhat, or No. In the final column to the right, note your thoughts including which areas you feel are the most critical in your context.

 Do I/we...	Yes 	Somewhat	No 	Notes
Pillar 1: Define the content and language standard(s)
 Develop content and language learning objectives for ELs based on standards
 Share content and language learning objectives with ELs
 Identify success criteria for ELs
 Share models of strong work with ELs
Pillar 2: Incorporate scaffolding to support ELs in achieving the standards
 Use scaffolded materials, instruction, and strategic grouping to remove barriers for ELs
 Select scaffolds based on individual EL strengths and needs
 Set expectations for gradual removal of scaffolding, as appropriate

Pillar 3: Support ELs' progress toward mastery
 Provide ELs sufficient time and opportunities for learning
 Focus on ELs' achievement
 Support ELs' late work
 Use homework as non-graded practice
Pillar 4: Assess ELs' progress equitably
 Assess for mastery
 Scaffold assessments for ELs based on individual EL strengths and needs
 Assign individual scores
 Provide separate scores by progress, process, and performance
Pillar 5: Involve ELs, families, & colleagues
 Explain grade level expectations, the process and the report card clearly
 Involve ELs and families in the entire process
 Co-grade (ESOL and content teachers) to ensure objectivity and understanding

3: Case Studies

Directions: Please select one of the following three case studies to read and discuss in small groups.

Elementary

An ESOL teacher at a rural elementary school with a small number of ESOL students is concerned about how ELs are graded at her school. Students' grades are based almost entirely on their performance on assessments that are provided as part of the school's purchased curriculum. For example, students' language arts grades are based on their performance on spelling, grammar, and reading comprehension tests that accompany the language arts curriculum. The tests are not scaffolded for ELs. As a result, many of the ELs in the school are receiving very poor grades. The ESOL teacher has tried to advocate for scaffolded assessments for ELs, but some teachers argue that that would be unfair to the other students who also struggle with the end-of-unit assessments.

Middle School

An urban middle school has a small but growing number of EL newcomers. These students receive separate daily language instruction for English language arts, but they are integrated into classes with non-ELs for such subjects as math, science, and social studies. The content teachers are frustrated because they don't know how to assess and grade these students' understanding of content. In an effort to try to decrease the frustration on the part of the teachers and to prevent these ELs from failing, the administration has implemented a policy that no EL at an ELP level 1 or 2 can receive below 75% in any course. Both ESOL teachers and content teachers have concerns about this new policy.

High School

At a suburban high school with a recent influx of ELs, some families of ELs are complaining that their children are not allowed to take the college-preparatory or advanced placement classes that their children need in order to be admitted to college. Instead, many ELs are enrolled in general or remedial classes. The school has a policy that in order to take higher level classes, students must have a certain grade point average and score at a certain level on state content assessments. The ESOL teachers and the families believe that this policy puts many ELs at a disadvantage because often both their classroom grades and their test scores are impacted by their level of language acquisition.
